

EDITOR'S NOTE

The Mercer Law Review hosts a legal symposium and publishes those materials in the Lead Articles Edition each year. This year's Symposium was focused on an incredibly relevant topic: "Corporate Law in the Trump Era." This Edition includes six articles from accomplished professors who I have come to admire. I would like to thank each of them for the hard work they put into their presentations and articles.

I would also like to thank them for their patience and cooperation throughout the editing process. I would like to extend a special thank you to Professor Gary Simson for his invaluable assistance in planning the Symposium. His leadership at the Mercer University School of Law and with the Southeastern Association of Law Schools allowed us to host a successful Symposium.

I also want to extend a special thanks to our Symposium commentators: Professor Jeremy Kidd, Professor Linda Jellum, and Ms. Billie Pritchard, Esq. Their remarks on the speaker's presentations were thoughtful and insightful.

I would like to express my sincere appreciation to our Editor in Chief, Clayton Kendrick, and our Managing Editors, Laura Leigh Fox, Devin Mock, and Addison Gantt, for their countless hours editing each article in this Edition. Most importantly, thank you to all of the members of the Mercer Law Review for your help in making the Symposium and the Lead Articles Edition a success. In particular, thank you to Micah East, Maia Middleton, and Samuel Lyon, whose writings appear in this Edition and compliment it well.

Finally, neither the Symposium nor the Lead Articles Edition of the Mercer Law Review would have been possible without the leadership and guidance of Yonna Windham Shaw. She has dedicated a lifetime of service to the Mercer Law Review and for that we are eternally grateful.

To the attorneys practicing corporate law, this Edition provides insight into the field and an understanding of the direction in which it is currently heading.
