Marshall Daugherty, Chairman of the Art Department, has brought glory to both himself and our school with the sculpting of a 17 foot bronze and granite monument of John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist Church. This monument will be erected in Reynolds Square in Savannah, Georgia, near the spot of John Wesley's abode during his two year mission in that city.

Mr. Daugherty has been recognized for this admirable achievement in the state by the North and South Georgia Conferences of the Methodist Church, and locally, Mercer University should be very proud of this professor's accomplishment. An honor has been bestowed upon the campus that is not an everyday distinction.

The sculptor is shown in his studio here working on the clay model, which is half the size of the monument to be cast.

Luther's 95 Thesis 450th Anniversary

Reformation Day was observed in the Mercer chapel this week with Dr. James Gettemy as guest speaker. Dr. Gettemy, president of the Hartford Seminary Foundation noted scholar and former official in the World Council of Churches, discussed the need for reformation and reform in the thinking of the modern church.

Also in connection with Reformation Day (October 30), the film "Martin Luther" will be shown in room 100 of the Student Center.

Controversial Film To Be Shown Here

The controversial film, "The Parable" which was shown at the Protestant pavilion at the New York World's Fair will be shown at Mercer on Thursday November 16.

Dr. Warren Carr, guest chapel speaker for that week will discuss the film.

David Schoenbrun

Major Gen. John M. Wright

Major General John M. Wright Jr., West Point graduate, and Commanding General of the Army Infantry Center at Fort Benning, Georgia will speak to the Mercer student body on Monday October 30, on the United States Military Commitment in Vietnam.

David Schoenbrun, television-radio news analyst and commentator, who has just returned from a three month tour of fifteen Asian countries, will speak here on Tuesday, October 31, at 7:30 pm under the auspices of Mercer University Student Government Association and Student Union.

During his interviews with leaders in these areas, Mr. Schoenbrun tried to find answers to the following: (1) Who are the foreign policy decision makers in Asia? (2) What are the major elements influencing decision-making? (3) What are the attitudes of each country towards its immediate neighbors, China, and the U.S.? (4) How do Asian decision makers feel about continued

U. S. military presence in Asia? In July 1967, Mr. Schoenbrun was appointed to the Faculty of International Affairs of the Columbia University Graduate School where he will teach the first course on Vietnam offered at that University. David Schoenbrun is that rarity, a serious scholar who is also an aggressive, hard driving news reporter, a linguist and a world affairs analyst of keenest perspicuity and wit.

Mr. Schoenbrun is preparing a book on this subject which he has undertaken for the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in Santa Barbara, California. This will be Mr. Schoenbrun's third book on foreign affairs and foreign leaders. His others are "As France Goes" and "The France Goes" and "The 3 Lives of Charles de Gaulle." In addition, he contributes frequently to such magazines as Life, The New York Times Magazine, and Esquire, and appears often on NET documentary programs.

BONE NAMED PHI DELTA PRESIDENT

Revived Literary Society To Rival Ciceronians

By Bill Dayton

One of Mercer's oldest student organizations, the Phi Delta Literary Society has been reformed with Leonard Bone as president. Organized in 1834, the Phi Delta Society dissolved in the late 1930's. It was the traditional rival of the Ciceronian Society, a rivalry which will be revived, Bone commented.

The reorganization came about when Bone called a meeting of the Ciceronian Society, thinking that the Ciceronians had fallen apart. On learning that the old Ciceronian organization was still functioning under acting president Bill Dayton, it was decided that Mercer would benefit more from reviving the Phi Delta Society than from merging the two Ciceronian organizations. It was also agreed that the two societies would debate some literary topics in the near future.

At his organizational meeting, Bone set up committees to draw up a new constitution and to select topics and books for discussion.

The Phi Delta and Ciceronian societies were formed when the Franklin Literary Society dissolved in 1834 at Penfield. In the early days, both societies had large buildings, private libraries and were the center of literary and forensic life at Mercer. In Penfield days, classes were suspended and people came from miles around to hear the Ciceronians and Phi Deltas debate literary topics like "Was Brutus Justified in Killing Caesar?" and political ones like "Should Texas be Admitted to the Union?"

Both societies had large numbers of honorary members. Robert E. Lee was an honorary Phi Delta and President Jefferson Davis was an honorary Ciceronian. The archives room in the Stetson Library contains many of the societies' acceptance letters from such members as well as old minutes from the organizations.

In 1903, the two societies placed their extensive libraries in the Mercer Library, on permanent loan.
