

PAR BLUSHES AS PROFS. WIELD CLUBS

down his club is disgust.
"Beauty. A beauty," yelled his caddy.

"What do you mean?" the professor asked.

"You're just two inches from the hole," the youngster replied.

"Well, I'll be swiggered," Prof. Knight murmured. "I was shooting for that green over yonder."

He claimed a 6 for the hole, Dr. Holtzclaw 8, Prof. Caylor 12, and Prof. Folk 6. Par for the hole is 4.

Other harrowing details will not be reported. Suffice it to say that the team of Caylor-Knight and the team of Holtzclaw-Folk came into the home stretch some three hours later running almost neck and neck. There had been some heart-breaking moments and incidents, but this is supposed to be a humorous story and they will not be mentioned.

On the ninth tee the professors paused for Coca-Colas and then drove off. Caesar foresaw this very occurrence when he wrote 2500 years ago, "Alit, Alia, in partem," which is translated literally, "Some in one direction, some in another."

Many strokes later the professors converged at the green, which was about the only orthodox thing they did in shooting the hole. Finally the last wayward ball had fallen in the cup. Then came the reckoning—a sad, sad story always, but in this instance a dire tragedy.

Prof. Caylor finished with a 77, and Prof. Knight with an 84, giving them an aggregate of 161 for the nine holes.

Dr. Holtzclaw's figures added up to 107, and those of Prof. Folk to 55, making a total of 162.

One stroke's difference! And out of a total of 323!

As Dr. Holtzclaw was leaving, Mr. Culver told him he had broken the course record with his 107.

"By the way," the pro remarked, "par for the course is 35."

The average score of the professors was 80½.

Each of the professors declared at terwards that he could shoot better golf.

"But, what can you expect," Dr. Holtzclaw asked, "when your partner shoots twenty above par."

ior representative, Harvie Stipe of the junior class, Henry Stokes of the sophomores, and Robert Kerr of the freshmen.

Coach Moore said that he was well pleased with the number of men who participated in the events. "It is most likely that a large program will be attempted next year."

CARLETON SPEAKS TO Y. M. C. A. HERE

Alford Carleton, one of the traveling secretaries of The Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, spoke at the Y. M. C. A. Tuesday night. For the past three years, Mr. Carleton has been Christian Educational worker in Turkey and he gave a discussion of his work there and of the Near East problem in general.

Wednesday night, Dean Peyton Jacob addressed this group and Prof. H. L. Batts, the newly elected faculty member of the cabinet, was the speaker Thursday night in the final program of the week.

NEXT YEAR SOPHS TO SELECT HEADS

The election of officers for the next year's sophomore class will be held Monday morning, May 7, at 10:30, in the chapel building, according to an announcement made by Archie Grinolds, president of this year's freshman class.

The present officers are: Archie Grinolds, of Macon, president; Harold Clotfelter, Atlanta, vice-president; and Copeland Carter, Milledgeville, secretary and treasurer.
