

RECORD CROWD IS ANTICIPATED HERE SATURDAY

Crary and Dudley ran wild for the Bulldogs.

Mercer expected to lose to Georgia but does not expect to lose to Howard. Howard was the only team against which the Bears did not score last year. The Howard team lost last year before last 3-0 but won last year 14-0.

Bancroft Out

Billy Bancroft, star quarter for the last three years and the man who ruined Mercer last year has been made assistant coach this year. In Van Buskirt, Howard has one of the best backs in the south. He was responsible for one of the touchdowns against Mercer last year.

In preparing for the Bulldogs, Coach Moore has changed Red Adams from guard to halfback. Adams played half during his freshman and sophomore years and showed great power in the scrimmage. Tuesday Branch is back in the lineup and will probably play a guard in Adams place. The lineup is expected to be the same as that which faced the Georgia Bulldogs. Mallard and Godby will be at ends; Ray and Lane at tackles, Branch and Stipe at guards, Merrit at center, Loser at quarter, Matt and Wright at halves and Alderman at full. Captain Hammock will be out on account of injuries in the Georgia game.

CUBS, GEORGIA PLAY FOOTBALL

Drilled Extensively

Coach Kay Tipton, however, has put away all thoughts of that game and is "settling for the Georgians". He has drilled the Cubs quite extensively this week, not only in formations and the like but in the other essential rudiments of the game.

It is understood that Georgia has a wonderful frosh squad this year. A visitor to Macon last week, in speaking of them, said:

"Man, they have one more powerful aggregation. One of the birds is especially good. His name is Gillis, and for two years was voted the best high school athlete in New York state. He can stand anywhere on the forty-yard line and dropkick the ball right through the posts without any trouble at all!"

Always though, Mercer and Georgia games are hard fought even if Georgia teams usually have an edge.

MAID EDITORIAL IS SUPPRESSED

This point of view was upheld and reported by several members of The Cluster staff in conference with President Dowell and the publicity committee of the university, which is comprised of John D. Allen, professor of journalism, chairman; Fred L. ... head of the English department; Hugh Awitrey, professor of foreign languages; Dr. John G. Har... professor of philosophy; J. C. ... registrar, and H. S. ... professor of commerce.

Trouble Before

In the past three or four years editorial policy of The Cluster, regarding its interpretation of student opinion has at one time or other of the school year conflicted with the administration's interpretation of the question. The relation between Cluster staff and administration has never been made clear, it is definite decision has been made. President Dowell explained that the Cluster was a dependent part of the university, not an independent organization. He drew the analogy of the son of a child to its parent or guardian. The authority for the publication of an article which is controversial, as far as the publication to the university is concerned, does not rest in the editors of the paper, nor in the staff, but in a representative or in the representatives of the administration, inferred the president.

Committee to Decide

The doubtful article must be presented to, and accepted by, Professors Allen and Awitrey, who were appointed as special advisers to the editors from the publicity committee. Should there still be any contention on the part of the editors that their expression of opinion should be published still, their case must be presented to the executive committee of the university, consisting of the deans and heads of the various schools and departments, and in whom rests the final authority.

The question, What is Student Opinion, which was injected into the discussion, was not defined, neither was the staff's position made any clearer. The discussion was tabled, until later, when a special committee from The Cluster editorial staff and

Tribunal Rules Against Boisterous Conduct of Students

Asks Co-operation

"Everyone knows that rules are not self-executing, but depend upon the cooperation of all who come under their jurisdiction, so that the effectiveness and the efficiency of the administration of the tribunal depends upon each individual student to report the infraction of the rules which he deems are detrimental to the school or are in interference with the rights guaranteed to the students by the university." The tribunal is not soliciting business but is merely asking that it be made to serve the purpose for which it was organized. It purports to handle things which might seriously touch the disciplining of the students of the university in such a way as to appear out of bearing with a gentleman and serious-minded student.

"The tribunal is not seeking to be a hard-boiled organization, but it wishes to become a serious organization for a serious purpose and it will not be a play-thing to offer amusement for a few. The work of the tribunal is an important and solemn business and should not be taken lightly."

Present Officers

The present officers of the tribunal are: J. Quentin Davidson, judge; Harvey L. Jay, solicitor; Charles M. Cork, defense counsel. Cases will be reported to Harvey Jay for prosecution.

The tribunal shall appoint proctors on every floor of each dormitory to report cases of the infraction of the above added offense especially, although it shall be their duty to report other cases also.

The first meeting of the tribunal will be held Monday night in the Phi Delta hall immediately after the Phi Delta society meeting.

Rules and regulations of the tribunal have been submitted to Dr. Dowell and the faculty committee for final approval. Although Dr. Dowell has not had time to read the provisions, he said, "I cannot commit myself finally on the worth and need of this organization, but I do hope it will be satisfactory and that the tribunal shall work in perfect harmony with the administration."

SENIORS ADOPT RULES FOR NEW STUDENTS HERE

9. Freshmen must tip caps and speak to all members of the faculty.

10. Freshmen shall conduct themselves at all times so as not to reflect on the reputation of the university.

11. Each member of the senior class pledges himself to report any infraction of any of the above regulations to the sheriff of the student tribunal.

12. Jurisdiction of infraction of the above rules is hereby conferred upon the student tribunal.

Diplomas Discussed

Other business which came before the class meeting included discussion of the invitations and diplomas of this year's class. A committee was appointed by the president, Luke Hill, to discuss the form of this year's invitations and report at the next meeting. The committee was composed of Eugene Eber, chairman, Lee Miller and Frank McWilliams.

A discussion of the diplomas showed that the majority of the class favored large diplomas instead of those in book form which were used last year. A committee composed of James P. Westberry, Bernard Brooks and Parks Martin, was appointed to continue investigation, and confer with President Dowell concerning the change.

faculty publicity committee will meet for further deliberation.

Meanwhile, at the request of the president, the editorial which resulted in the conference, was kept from publication.

mill trails. I clung to these as closely as circumstances would permit. I walked on, reveling all day in the natural beauties of the lofty mountains on my right, and the broad, blue Pacific on the left.

Seeks Place for Night

"Toward the close of day, as the sun slowly approached the western horizon, casting its long rays through clouds of crimson, my thoughts centered upon a place to spend the night. As night came on, I caught fleeting glimpses of clouds of pale, thin smoke, as they rose spasmodically from the thin undergrowth on a headland a half mile ahead. I made the distance to the headland in quick strides, but entered the undergrowth cautiously. After having gone several yards, I burst suddenly into a cleared circular space in which was an improvised camp. In the center of the clearing was the fire, and close by it stood a tall, clean-shaven, though seedy man of Dutch appearance. He stood with axe in hand, gazing intently at the spot from which I had emerged.

"My God! Another one! Won't they ever let me alone!" he exclaimed.

"I was startled by these ejaculations. As I stood staring, he spoke again.

"I saw the smoke from your fire and thought possibly I would find company with which to spend the night."

"Company! ... it! It has been the ruin of me now. It's to keep away from people that I'm here."

Strangers Becomes Amiable

"A few moments of silence followed. As no more invectives or averments to my presence seemed forthcoming, I prepared to make myself at home. During the preparation of supper, my companion grew more amiable. It was not until after the meal, however, when pipes, which are breeders of good fellowship, were "He began by telling me of his early discovered aptitude for things mechanical. Although he had worked as a railroad man, he had found time to perfect several mechanical devices of different natures, (and some of them, that the stranger dropped his militant mien and related something of his life.

these he actually produced). A number of years ago he had struck upon the idea that power could be obtained from the air. For many years he labored upon the scheme, guarding it closely until its development would warrant a patent.

Tells of Experiences

"The news of his scheme leaked out. Lately several unscrupulous men had attempted to wring from him the secret. So persistent became they in their purpose that he was forced to seek safety in seclusion. He, therefore, became a bum, bitterly averse to society, ever seeking to escape persecution from his enemies by becoming an inhabitant of only the remote and deserted sections of the country.

"He told me that on several occasions his enemies had attempted to dope him, hoping thereby that he would talk while under its influence and reveal his secret. Whether he was really in earnest or was laboring under fantastic illusions of being haunted by his enemies was beyond my discernment, but his sincerity was impressive.

"After his unique story, we went to bed; he to keep watch against his enemies, I to have my mental forebodings overcome by physical exhaustion. I was up and away early the next morning, after bidding him goodbye.

"After having followed the coast all the way, I arrived in Portland five days later. Here I made my headquarters, from which other trips were taken. Among them was that one to Mt. Hood, which a party of us climbed."
