Editorial On Marriage Causes Dismissal Of Cento Writer

Danville, Ky., Feb. 12—Charles J. Thurmond's views on matrimony, which were published in an editorial under the caption, "Stupidity of Marriage," have cost him his job as editor of the Cento, student publication of Centre College.

Thurmond wrote that marriage "ends in wrecked lives and the casting of ugly blemishes on young lives having to come in contact with it."

At a meeting of the college discipline committee called Tuesday by Dr. Charles J. Turck, president of the college, Thurmond was ousted as editor. The paper's staff named Larry Worbold to succeed him. Thurmond's supporters claimed the storm was caused by "class politics," but their protests were to no avail.

Big Demand For Papers

A big demand for copies of the February 5th issue of the publication was reported Wednesday when it became known that the editorial had resulted in the removal of Thurmond from the editorial post.

Thurmond, a senior in the college and a resident of Danville, will be permitted to remain in school and no further disciplinary action is planned. In a statement he said there was no one in college "who is stricter in his personal morals than I am," and stated "I do not practice what is expressed as a possible solution to unsatisfactory marriage."

Olympic Buildings Nearing Completion

Los Angeles, California—Construction of boat houses, floats and other equipment necessary to complete preparations for the rowing events of the Games of the Xth Olympiad, which are to be celebrated in this city from July 30 to August 14, is now under way, according to the Organizing Committee for the Games.

The races will be held in Long Beach Marine Stadium, 40 minutes from Olympic Stadium, for five days beginning August 9. Events include four-oared shells with coxswain, pair-oared boats without coxswain, single sculls, two-oared shells with coxswain, four-oared shells without coxswain, double sculls without coxswain and eight-oared shells.

Long Beach Marine Stadium comprises a fresh-salt water course of sufficient length to contain a splendid 2000-metre straightaway course. More than 100,000 spectators can view the races from the bordering shore, and grandstands to accommodate 10,000 more, are being built. Construction work now going on includes also dressing rooms, containing lockers and shower baths for the oarsmen, as well as lounges and dining rooms.

PRESIDENT ALEMBOIC CLUB RESIGNS; "TOO MANY FIGUREHEADS"

"Something is radically wrong," the letter continues, "when a club supposedly made up of instructors and advanced students of science does not have a single instructor as a member. That something is a general apathy on the part of the instructors. If the instructors can find no time to meet with the club, you can expect little enthusiasm from the students."

No Cooperation
"If the professors are as interested as they maintain, it seems they should be willing to make certain sacrifices and grant certain privileges. Thus far they have done neither. As a result of this indifference, the organization suffers, and the blame is laid on the students, when it really belongs on the heads of the departments."

The letter thanked the members of the club and faculty for their loyalty and cooperation with the club in the past.

Pittman, who is a senior majoring in science, was named president of the Alembic club at the fall election, held October 23, 1931.

NEWTON HOLDS MERCER REVIVAL

"Modern science has never ceased working to find out the secrets of the universe in order that man may work better with God. Every day some research worker gives up his life in order that his fellow men may profit from what he has gained. When doctors lose a patient, they are not content until they have found out why they were beaten. It is the never ending quest for the secrets of nature that men make to carry out the will of God."

Napoleon Failed
In history, the case of Napoleon was cited as a failure to get dominion over the world. When Napoleon was on his way to Elba, a former officer came to him and reminded him how he had ruled nations, but was now absolutely powerless. Napoleon said he had failed because he had never had dominion over himself. He had found that one must be able to rule oneself before one can rule others.

were false and that Mr. Pittman had other reasons than those given for resigning.

Mr. Reavis Sproul, former vice president of the club, was also disinclined to talk very much on the subject. He said that the charges can neither be denied nor affirmed.

"Mr. Pittman's resignation was to me, as to the other members a surprise. Just what were his grounds for taking such action, I do not know. I do, however, agree with him that the club is somewhat of a figurehead in the way of an honorary club. The club calls for 20 hours of science for membership, but mathematics and psychology will count as science. For this reason I too have been disgusted with it and have been absent from the last few meetings."

Mr. Buckner asserted that the club would undoubtedly accept Mr. Pittman's resignation and that Elmo Clyde, vice president would serve until another could be elected.

Dr. Wilkins Plans General College of Three Years

Cincinnati—(IP)—A new type of college, to be organized for the benefit of non-professional students, and to be of three-year duration, was suggested by Dr. Ernest Hatch Wilkins, president of Oberlin College, before the meeting of the Association of American Colleges, of which he is also president.

Citing the special needs of this type of student, Dr. Wilkins said:

"I therefore propose the creation of a new type of college, to be called the general college, which would give these student-what society really wants them to have, namely, a training which will enable them to live well as members of society. To live well as members of society means to live with intelligence and good-will in each of the five fields of social living, which are: home life, the field of earning, citizenship, leisure, and the field of philosophy and religion."

"Training for successful life in these five fields involves training in health, training in the use of what may be called general mental tools; English, logic and so forth, instruction, and some type of experience in each of the five fields, and the encouragement of social-mindedness. A college course carefully designed for this purpose could be completed in three years. New institutions might be founded as three-year general colleges, and those four-year colleges which, through lack of endowment, cannot stand the cost of specialized work, would also do well to become three-year general colleges.

"The establishment of such colleges would mean that the four-year college could be more exacting than it now is in its admission requirements and might thus secure a more homogeneous body of students.

"The lower half of the four-year college should, however, not content itself with the type of work it is now doing; but should devote its two years primarily to the same type of training for the five fields of social living for which training is to be given in the general college.

"The upper half of the four-
