DAILY MUSTER

It is understood that a working agreement has been effected with the New York Chimes whereby the Wurcer authorities agree to inclose a copy of the Chimes in their edition every other day. In exchange for this service the Chimes will allow the Muster to carry the syndicated articles of their two ace columnists, Willie "Big Shot" Butts and Nerts Suby. It is understood that the latter is now the highest paid writer in the journalistic world, far surpassing the income of the late Barter Isbane, who drew a cool 20 dollars a week at the time of his death. Suby, although he has now broken into the Big Show, still states that he owes all to "dear ole Wurcer."

WRITER TELLS

"Sit down, honorable one," he darwled. "But aren't you early? The season of learning has only started 14 suns ago."

Too astonished for remonstrance, I sank weakly.

"But Dean," I struggel, "Haven't you changed since last quarter. Or am I crazy?"

"Yes, by the Celestial fire, I've changed. I grew weary of political science and that accursed political economy. I've studied oriental philosophy. That convinced me that Harvard was wrong — that all America was wrong. Hence this—"

With a wave of his jeweled hand, he swept the room.

"Dean, your speech," I protested.

"Bah. By the bones of my ancestors. Leave correct pronunciation for prigs and scholars. I prefer this to scholarship. But, here, most honorable one. You must be thirsty. Naombi, mix two absinthe cocktails."

Naombi, a beautiful dancing girl, fled to execute his order.

"But Dean, your wife, your family—what of them?"

"Umm," he replied at length. Unfortunately, they didn't fit in with my plans. So I had them eliminated."

"You mean you killed . . .?"

"What of it, my dear Hailey? Cobra poisoning is little known in the United States."

"Well, uh, Dean, I really came in to find out about subjects for this quarter."

"Oh, don't bother about that, worthy one. Just fill out any subjects you care to take and I'll sign the honorable card. But you really shouldn't go."

"Oh, I must, Dean."

"Dignified one," and drawing closer, he revealed a wicked-appearing dagger beneath the folds of his robe. "your lips must remain as silent as the Sphinx, you understand. Especially to President Powell across the hall. These daggers have a way of curing talkativeness, you know."

"Of course, Dean. Not a word," I whispered.

And now, I am afraid of the walking shadow, and daggers, and cobra poison.

CO-ED BASKETBALL

Newson, and Hensylvania. They have never been scored upon in a game and were having some difficulty in obtaining opponents until it was agreed that at least one member of the Keltics would substitute for one of our girls and thus bring down the standard of play. The exhibition tour will include the entire nation and most of the large squad will be taken along. A special private train with compartments for each player is being arranged. Major Flair stated that he did not believe that more than fifty of the leading players could be taken along as there was such a large corps of trainers and maids to be taken. The many beautiful uniforms which the co-eds display to such advantage will in all probability take up an entire baggage car.

The co-eds are to leave this week-end with supreme confidence in the success of their trip and perhaps hopes of Hollywood careers. At any rate, the world will soon know as we already do, that the co-eds of Wurcer, unlike the male students, can really play unbeatable basketball. Each co-ed has been presented with a large gold placque together with the customary sweaters, jackets, uniforms, etc.

fast ball which was coming across the plate so fast that five catchers mits were torn to shreds and three Yankee catchers sent to the hospital with broken hands. The climax of Smith's brilliant exploit came when all the catchers were injured; Smith pitched his fast ball and then ran down to the plate and plaining to Mrs. Sprowell, the librarian and Wurcer president decided that a new and much larger building would have to be constructed in the center of Tattall Square park.

"That will be a very commanding location for the Wurcer library" (Continued on page 348)

DEAN'S LIST

In comparative anatomy there were 538 A's given out of a class of 563. "I don't know why my class made such a poor showing," Professor Larver said.

The Law school ran highest for the quarter, all but two of the 475 students failing to make the list. Bolson Dashmore succeeded in making the list for the eighth consecutive time, thus automatically winning a five year fellowship to Oxford. Mr. Dashmore is the seventy-first Wurcer man to receive an Oxonian fellowship.

"We must make every effort to get better marks for the new quarter," said President Dright Sprowell. "If our scholastic average drops any lower, we must relinquish the $8,000,000 endowment being offered to us by the Carnegie Foundation," he added.

caught his own pitch after the batter had swung and missed. This superman feat was all the fans could endure and they mobbed their idol, breaking his neck, both legs, an arm, and sixteen ribs in the bare worship. Latest reports from the hospital state that Smith is in good condition and will be able to pitch this afternoon. Tickets will be on sale at two o'clock.

After scribbling three pages during an exam, a Marquette University student wrote: "I don't think you'll read this far, and to prove it I'll tell you about the basketball game I saw yesterday." He wasn't called on his five-page sports discourse.

Ninety-two per cent of the freshmen at Pennsylvania State college have voted that a college woman should get married before the age of 25.
