

RATTING WEEK UNDERGONE BY FROSH CO-EDS

Many Ordeals Suffered By Freshmen; Wear Evening Dresses

The first year co-eds are ending today their week of humiliation by wearing onions fastened around their necks and saying nothing outside of class except "I am a lowly rat." The ordeal began for them last Monday when they had to appear with their hair done up in plaits, make-up on one side of face only, and wearing no belts.

Tuesday the girls strolled around the campus with mismatched shoes on wearing their dresses wrong side out and on backwards. Wednesday they wore evening dresses to school with red finger nail polish on every other nail.

Alarm clocks were carried around by the girls on Thursday and were set to go off in each class. In addition each co-ed stumbled around wearing one high heeled and one low heeled shoe.

All violations of these regulations set by the upper-class co-eds will be punished at rat court on Tuesday night, October 19.

Members of the freshman class of '37 have expressed various reasons for choosing Mercer to attend for their educational work. Predominant among these reasons, given impromptu by a few of the students were "the words of pride and praise by Mercer's 'old Grads' for their Alma Mater."

Joe V. Cook, Dalton; Mary Louise McIntosh, Elberton; Chip Peabody, Atlanta; Carolyn Stillwell, Atlanta; and Norman Shands, Columbus, all quoted prominent members of the Alumni who expressed their endorsement of the faculty, student body, academic standing, and athletic prowess of Mercer.

Caroline Adams, Tampa; Florida; Marshall Gray, Sparks; Tallulah Hurst, Social Circle; Bert James, College Park; and Sara Rice, Elberton, agreed that Mercer was an outstanding school of the South, offering personal attention from the faculty, exceptional opportunity for significant work both in classroom and in campus activities, and a closer association with all the members of the student body.

J. Maxwell Bersch, Windsor, Canada; James Byrd, Edgefield; Doris Coffield, Monroe; John Couric, Dublin; and Catherine Wood, Newnan, mentioned the high rating and accredited standing of Mercer in
