

Offer of Marriage Made Prof. Hagan

German Farmer Asks Traveller To Marry His Young Daughter

JOB ALSO OFFERED

By BEN HOZEMAN

(Editor's note: This is the third in a short series of articles about the round-the-world tour of Prof. Richard Hagan, new instructor in the law school.)

In southern Germany Mr. Hagan had an experience that befalls few Americans. He became acquainted with Bernhard Franzen, who was a leader of about 65 men.

Just before he left, Bernhard said to him, "Herr Hagan, I am a big landowner and a high official. I have a very charming young daughter. I should like an American for a son-in-law; do you know anything about farming?"

To his friend's chagrin, he told him he was a lawyer. However, he took his name and address. If things don't go so well for Mr. Hagan here in America, he can still go back to Germany, become a good Nazi and have a buxom German girl for a wife.

An offer of a job came Mr. Hagan's way in Germany. He was traveling one day when a German farmer stopped him, desiring to hire him. However, when he learned it was working in a stable, he declined generously and continued his travels.

FOOTBALL

The keystone of the defense is the tackle. He must be half guard—half end. As a guard he must play a charging game; as an end, he must sometimes play a drifting game. He must be able to use his hands and legs to protect himself from wing backs and ends, and secondarily to use his body to pile up interference and his arms to reach out and tackle.

The chief duty of an end is to keep the play from going around him and to drive into the line. If he can break the interference and tackle the runner he has more of a chance of winning his letter.

The little cur has been boarding at one of the "nice" Sherwood kennels, and is reported to have been eating at one of the well-known dining halls around here.

Although he was ejected from a classroom last week, he usually manages to stay through a session if he doesn't take a notion to see what everyone's feet look like. Just as sure as he tries to move around, though, he is detected and ordered to wait outside for his master.

other was always thrilling the crowd with long runs and passes.

Mercer unleashed her aerial attack in the struggle and as a result three of her four touchdowns came through this route. Bill Howland, Bob Alley, and Neal Allen scored touchdowns by receiving passes and Johnny Mattox scored the other through successive line plunges. Art Pledger's educated toe contributed three of the extra points and Vee Yon kicked the other.

The Bruin's showing last week was highly encouraging and with any good fortune at all they should take the remaining two games in stride.

Coaches Russell, Dougherty, and Reddick used every one of their squad of 34 players with the exception of the injured Earl Lewis.

Basketball Too

In addition to football, "Bubber" was outstanding in basketball, winning three letters and being named All-Conference guard. He also made a letter in baseball, playing the rightfield position.

During his freshman year at Mercer, Lawrence played tackle on the Cub football team, and in his sophomore year he was converted into an end and has played three years of varsity ball at that position. Lawrence has also played three years of varsity basketball.

Pan-Hellenic Head

"Bubber" is past-president of the Kappa Sigma social fraternity, and president of the Pan-Hellenic Council of fraternities. He was selected for membership in the Blue Key national honor fraternity at the last tapping ceremony.

For the past three summers "Bubber" has attended the Platoon Leaders' Class of the United States Marine Corps at Quantico, Va. Upon receiving his degree from Mercer Lawrence will be eligible for a commission as a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps Reserve.

Lawrence is majoring in economics and plans to go into the advertising business upon graduation.

Poore, of Atlanta, dubbed "one of the greatest halfbacks" when the Bruins conquered a powerful Florida team by the count of 19-12 in 1924.

Abe B. Conger, Bainbridge, was a backfield ace during his stay on the local campus. He is now chairman of the alumni athletic committee. Supervisor of schools in Atlanta is Knox Walker, a former star on the basketball team.

Attendance at the function was swelled by the presence of some 150 members of the Georgia High School Principals Association, the majority of whom were former Mercer students. Their presiding officers included R. E. Hood, of Brunswick, and Frank Taylor, Bowden.

Again, late in the final frame, the Cubs worked the ball down to the Monroe six inch line only to lose the leather on downs.

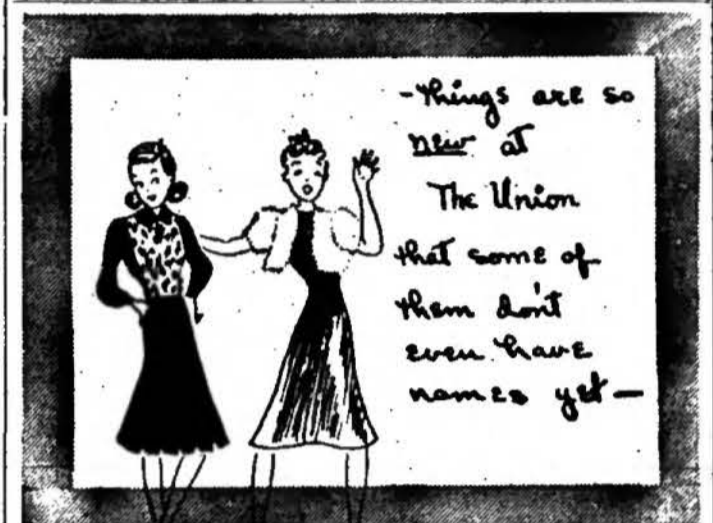

Throughout next week the freshmen will work especially on offense concentrating on their usual trickery and passing attack, Coach Touch stated.

display contest sponsored by Blue Key. A prize of fifteen dollars was offered to the Macon store which arranged the best window presenting the Homecoming idea. The winner, Goldman's, 572 Cherry St., gave its entire window space and a great deal of thought and work to the project. In one window Mercer colors were carried out in dress models including a figure wearing a black skirt and an orange M sweater. Mercer colors and pennants were draped along the back side and a small teddy bear with a blue stocking in his chops sat on the floor by "Welcome Mercer."

The other window had a similar background of P. G. colors. Three figures were dressed in white evening dresses and the color scheme was carried out with blue evening accessories and "Welcome Presbyterian." Football's flower, the chrysanthemum, was used with corresponding streamers in both windows.
