Students Doubt Human Factor in Honor Plan

Adoption of the honor system at Mercer is a "capital idea", to quote a majority of students interviewed. A number of Mercerian qualified this statement, however.

"The system would improve the attitude of students. Cheating would decrease because students would appreciate being treated as adults. The drawback comes because no person will tell on someone they see cheating."

Tom Heaton: "People aren't going to report on others. How can it work?"

Evelyn Neel: "Capital idea, provided everybody has the honor. But do you think it will work at Mercer?"

Lamar Sizemore: "A fine thing provided the students will get into the spirit of the thing. It won't work unless the students are for it 100 percent."

Q. R. Nolan: "A good idea but too idealistic."

Ann Millican: "If it goes through, it will make the students prouder of the university. This has been proved by the schools that use the system now."

Raymond O'Quinn: "It won't work."

Mary Halliburton: "It's a good idea and should be put into effect immediately."

The law school uses the honor system successfully. Students in that college regard the proposed amendment to the student constitution seriously.

Ed Dorsey: "It won't work as a group project. It will succeed only if every person takes it upon himself individually to make it succeed."

Jack Nesbitt: "Success of the plan will require two things: conscientious desire on the part of the student body, and a certain amount of education of the student body so it will realize the need of the honor system."

recount. They get feelings, no less. Doubtless several of them regret this when a new bolt is needed to repair some ravage to their 'tinder' epicurems.

However, after 10 years the Robots War Humans robots begin to feel a little big for their armor and declare war on the humans who are their only means of manufacture. They get a little sensitive on the subject of titles and etiquette and such, and want to be treated as humans. However, instead of reading Dale Carnegie, they get an inferiority complex and proceed to kill off humans, forgetting that they have no means of carrying on in "Tin Pan Alley" without them.

Finally, there is only one lone old man who is slightly bewildered by it all, left on earth with the robots.

The supporting cast includes Nat Kaderley, Henry Warnock, Phil Cox, Hendley Napier, Harold Hollingsworth and Nathan Nolan, as engineers and technicians, Rogers Nelson, Thomas Boone, Fred Beverley and Sara Boone are the robots.

The play is under the direction of Dr. Wilbur Stout and he is assisted by Miss Jeanette Blanks.

Tickets may be secured from members of the cast.

And so, boys and girls, until next Tuesday night, we leave you and the "Lone Stranger" to ponder the wiles of fate and the end of the play.

strokes, rescue approaches and carries and artificial respiration."

The courses, both senior and advanced, are given free to all who are interested in life saving. At the close of the senior course, members receive a life saving emblem and a Red Cross certificate.

Bill Thames and Dan Reed, Mercer students, have both had previous instructions and are well acquainted with the courses. Virginia Harvey and Jane Gary, Wesleyan students, conduct mixed classes of girls and boys.

Class Adopts Tie Insignia

Those maroon bow-ties runnin' around all those necks signify that their wearers are members of Mercer's junior law class.

Why? Because the class was the inspiration of Prof. David Meade Feild's humorous ballad, inspired by the battered fedora presented to the acting dean last year. And also because the class is unique in that politics play no part in this organization—the more democratic coin-tossing decides weighty matters.

Choosing a symbol worthy of representing the members of the "distinguished" group was difficult indeed.

After a lengthy controversy, Sanders Lane and Samuel Lowe suggested the maroon bow ties. The proposal was accepted, because, in the words of Mr. Lowe:

"Such a regal mark of distinction will certainly satisfy the situation."
