A SONG OF YOUTH

John Milton Samples

Here's a song for you, sweet maiden, At the dawn of Youth's bright morn; A song of joy and sorrow. Ere the heart with grief be torn; To-day your sun is shining, Your skies of hope are clear; While the future holds the secret, Its measure of joy and tear. The dimples change to wrinkles, And the roses fade and die, They'll be restored full measure In the glad sweet By and By. The cheek so soft and tender, So warm and smooth and white, Will glow with a fresher beauty In that Land of New Delight. And the gently heaving bosom With its rhythmic rise and fall

Will beat to a sweeter music Where the angel tongues enthral. The form of grace and action Must bend with the weight of years And the eyes grow dim with peering Through the blinding mist tears. But oh, the joy of living, E'en here in a world of clod! 'Tis only the earnest-giving Of that wondrous Land of God! So drain Life's cup of pleasure, Its bitter and its sweet; And may God give full measure And guide your eager feet. He sits apart, The dance goes on; He looks with saddened gaze Upon the merry throng, And why? Because he's been betrayed By the one he trusted; His suspender button's bursted.
