Project in Tunisia

Training for one of three Peace Corps contingents bound for Tunisia began April 21 when 30 heavy-machinery mechanics report for a special six-week course at the Caterpillar Tractor Company's Training Center in Peoria, Ill.

This is the first time American industry has been contracted by the Peace Corps to administer a training program.

Following their technical training in Peoria, the mechanics will go to Indiana University where they will join the two other groups. The other Tunisia groups will be made up of 30 architects and construction supervisors and 20 physical training instructors. All three groups will report to the Indiana campus on June 4.

The overall Peace Corps project for Tunisia was designed to aid the new republic's long-range economic and social development by working in critical areas of housing, agriculture, road construction and youth fitness.

Although it has a good basic road system, Tunisia still suffers from a lack of reliable connecting links between several important regions.

The physical education instructors will be assigned to the country's extensive system of youth camps.

In all of their efforts, the Peace Corps Volunteers will be actively teaching Tunisians as well as working in the field at the root level.

At Indiana University the Volunteers will take intensive courses in French, the political and cultural history of Tunisia.
