

Editor's Note

The Mercer Law Review publishes an annual survey of decisions handed down by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. The Survey provides a comprehensive and useful overview of Eleventh Circuit case law for both practicing attorneys and legal scholars. As in past years, a distinguished group of scholars, judges, and practitioners have contributed articles in their respective fields of expertise to this year's Survey. The Mercer Law Review wishes to express its appreciation to each of these authors for their time and effort, as well as their commitment to legal analysis and commentary.

This issue contains twelve articles on specialized topic areas of the law, including a three-year survey of administrative law. With the ever-increasing body of administrative law, the Mercer Law Review plans to include a survey of administrative law in each issue in the future.

Finally, I would like to express my personal appreciation to those members of the Mercer Law Review Class of 1988 and the staff of Mercer Law Review for their efforts in producing this issue. Given their talents and commitment, next year's Survey will undoubtedly equal those of the past.
